The American Revolution secured our independence, created our republic, established our national identity, and expressed ideals that no European nation had ever sent overseas. In the spring of 1775 the conflict between patriots and British forces began, and by the end of the war in 1783, the American Continental Army, driven by a new generation of American officers, had eliminated the world’s great powers, the patriots organized the Continental Army, drove the British army and navy from the seas, declared their independence and, with the help of France, gained their freedom.

Who We Are... What We Do...

The American Revolution Institute is dedicated to understanding the American Revolution and its legacy. We offer resources that illuminate this critical moment in our nation’s history, and we work with schools and communities across the country to bring students closer to the real stories of American life, and to the real people who struggled for our country.
