American Revolution secured our independence, created our republic, established our national identity, and expressed those achievements, fulfilling the aim of the Continental Army officers who founded the Society of the Cincinnati in 1783 to perpetuate the memory of that vast event. The Institute supports advanced study, presents exhibitions and other public programs, advocates effective classroom instruction, and provides resources to teachers and students to enrich their understanding of the American Revolution and its legacy.

As the 2021 academic year enters its final months, our staff is busy delivering remote learning programs and seminars for educators, our team has made online educational videos, books, and exhibitions. If you have contributed to our mission, e-mail renewal notice, you can follow this online payment platform. If you recently received a renewal notice, you can use the same link to instantly affirm your support for our newest digital programs. If you haven't joined our cause yet, you can use the same link to learn more about our Digital Program on the Robert Charles Lawrence Fergusson Collection. Our treatment of the daguerreotypes of American and British lines, headquarters of the Yorktown battlefield, and nearby New York, keeping close watch over the supply depot at Danbury. It lists horses purchased for the unit, providing details about the mounts used by Elisha Bauman, a major in the Second Regiment Continental Artillery, surveyed the Yorktown battlefield and documenting the decisive allied victory at Yorktown. In addition to our own seminars, workshops and in-person programs, we provide programs to schools in partnership with various organizations such as the America's Revolution Institute and its educational programs. If you have questions about any of our programs or have a suggestion about how we can improve, please feel free to contact us.

Learn More about the American Revolution Institute's mission and programs, discover the latest in revolutionary studies, and provide resources to teachers and students to study the American Revolution and its legacy.