Thomas Pococke Under a Microscope

Confirmation of the will of the founder of the American Revolution Institute, Bill Savage, adds a new chapter to our story of vision and audacity, creating the history of the next generation to the next generation. Support from One Revolution, Inc., its cofounders, Bill and Ilona Savage, are using advanced light microscopy analytics and other tools to analyze and identify the unique original patterns and visual characteristics in an effort to determine the leaves and ornamental features. This new effort opens the door for the society to expand its influence and expertise as we see the development of the comprehensive plans for realizing the important outcomes of the project. The business continues its partnerships, powered by the American Revolution Institute, to explore the conservation and preservation of these leaves, and the conservation team at the American Revolution Institute has completed the overall project. We are also thrilled to be sharing these leaves with the world, to benefit our conservation efforts.

New Video Tour of Anderson House

The Society of the Cincinnati relies on income from the rental use of Anderson House to support the work of the American Revolution Institute. The First Delaware Regiment — which fought in the Battles of Trenton and Princeton and was the first regiment to arrive in Philadelphia following the British surrender at Yorktown — and the First Delaware Regiment of Light Dragoons, the first regiment to arrive in Baltimore following the British surrender at Yorktown, are both part of the American Revolution Institute's permanent collection. These leaves, which provide a comprehensive guide to the Revolutionary War in the South, have been completed in collaboration with the First Delaware Regiment of Light Dragoons, the first regiment to arrive in Baltimore following the British surrender at Yorktown.
